

EDITORIAL

“Life takes on meaning when you become motivated, set goals and charge after them in an unstoppable manner.”

Dental public health is the science and the art of preventing oral disease, promoting oral health, and improving the quality of life through the organized efforts of society. Journal of Oral Health and Research (JOHR) is of interest to dentists working in dental public health and to other professionals concerned with disease prevention, health service planning, and health promotion throughout the world. The primary objectives of our Journal are multifarious: to advance the science and art of dentistry, to encourage scientific research, and to improve and enhance the general standard of dentistry. The dental community is, therefore, provided with an educational tool which monitors and reports the latest developments in dental science and its application to preventive dentistry, clinical dentistry, dental care management, and dental research.

Our Journal publishes original scientific papers with special emphasis on accomplished research, as well as unusual case reports, review articles and other relevant information which will assist the Journal in achieving its objectives in the context of high professional standards.
